A PROFESSIONAL PRISONER.

"Yes," said he, "Warden Will discharged four of us at a lick, and now I feel just like a fish out of water, I'm lost when I'm out of jail. After I stay out long enough to get fresh air and a change of vitals, I'll tramp it to some other country and stay thirty or sixty days with 'em." The middle aged man that spoke the above words was discharged from jail a few days ago, along with four others. He had been committed for thirty days on the charge of vagrancy. Said that his proper name was Peter Jansout, although he was so accustomed to giving out fictitious names that he hardly knew sometimes what his real name was. He was a tall man, pale and not healthy looking. He was thirty-eight years of age, nearly twenty of which he was passed in jail.

He was born in Alabama, and his first offense was theft, for which he was sentenced for one year in the Montgomery jail. He served his time, and for good conduct was allowed commutation. His next adventure was stealing a horse in Charlotte, N. C., and he was sentenced for two years. Between the first two imprisonments he was out of jail not quite two months. When his time was out he went to Tennessee, thence to Missouri, thence so far up as the copper mines of Lake Superior, thence to Michigan and back through Illinois, Indiana, Ohio and New York. In all these States, Jansout went under the name of Rollins, and was imprisoned in seven different jails for various offenses.

"One thing I can say, and which I kind of feel proud of, I never did anything to hurt anybody; I never stole much that the owners did not get back again, and what people lost by me only went to keep me when I was not in 'lock.' I've been in the Boston jail and the Portsmouth jail, but so far I've kept away from the New York Tombs or Blackwell's Island or Sing Sing. There's bad company there, as long as there is other jails to go to, why, I'll keep away from these. I was in the Morris-town jail last year for vagrancy. I think that is the best charge to get sent up for. Most sentence you get is sixty days, and that is long enough to stay during the summer in any jail. In summer I like to travel around. I tramp from one city to another. I like the Berk County jail, it reminds me of the Joliet prison. People here are kind enough, and the 'grub' is solid and so's the work. It's the quietest jail I was ever in, and I've boarded in twenty-seven different ones in my time. I don't think there's a man in the country that has a better record than that. If there is I never heard of it. But that's not all; I ain't done living yet. I bounce around pretty lively before I pass in my checks. I used to get sent up for three years, but that's played out now. I've learned five trades in my time. Am a weaver, shoe maker, brush and broom maker, learned cigar making in the Hartford, Connecticut, jail one year ago, and can lay bricks with the best of them. That is, I could when I worked with my father, who was a bricklayer. That was my first trade. I've got so used to living in jail, that I get tired of living outside. I get disgusted. I don't like to talk to people, and I'm surprised at myself that I've talked to you so long as I have. I can do no good by reforming, and that's why I keep going to jail. I earn enough to pay my board. People needn't be afraid I'll ever harm 'em. Stealin's played out with me now. No more for me, I'm going over in the next country town, and as soon as I get tired of being out, why I'll go. It's very easy to get sent up if you know how. I'd rather be in jail than out of it, when I know I've only got a short time to serve."

The above is the substance of an interview a reporter had with a sincere looking traveler, as he sat on a neighboring doorstep eating a supper of cold victuals. Chief Cullen came along and recognized the man who was committed thirty days ago for vagrancy. His story is undoubtedly true.

BEYOND COMPREHENSION.—When Daniel Webster was in his best moral estate, and when he was in the prime of his manhood, he was one day dining with a company of literary gentlemen in the city of Boston. The company was composed of clergymen, lawyers, physicians, statesmen, merchants, and almost all classes of literary persons. During the dinner the conversation incidentally turned upon the subject of Christianity. Mr. Webster, as the occasion was in honor of him, was expected to take a leading part in the conversation, and he frankly stated as his religious sentiments, his belief in the divinity of Christ and his dependence upon the atonement of the Saviour. A minister of very considerable literary reputation sat almost opposite him at the table, and he looked at him and said: "Mr. Webster, can you comprehend how Jesus Christ could be both God and man?" Mr. Webster, with one of those looks which no man can imitate, fixed his eye upon him, and promptly and emphatically said: "No, sir, I cannot comprehend him; and I would be ashamed to acknowledge him as my Saviour if I could comprehend it. If I could comprehend him he would be no greater than myself, and such is my conviction of accountability to God, such is my sense of sinfulness before him, and such is my knowledge of my own incapacity to recover myself, that I feel I need a superhuman Saviour."

A NEW SLEEPER.—A new style of sleeping-car—the Mauboussier—has been introduced with success in Great Britain. The carriage, instead of consisting of one grand saloon, like the Pullman cars, is divided into small compartments—a design which Colonel Mauboussier probably thinks will appeal to the Englishman's love of seclusion. The boudoirs are fitted up for either four or two individuals, the sleeping berths, like those of a saloon steamer, being placed one over another. The steps by which the upper sleeper mounts to his couch serve in the daytime as a handy little table, at which the passenger can write comfortably, and the lower berths make comfortable sofa chairs. The operation of bed-making, by the most simple and ingenious of processes, can be performed in a couple of minutes. When the passenger is tired of his well carpeted and upholstered private room he may stroll up and down the corridors, in which there are a refreshment bar and lavatories. Electric bells are at the disposal of each passenger, who by them can summon an attendant, whose special duty it is to wait upon the occupants of the cars. The beds, it should be mentioned, are placed across the carriage, an arrangement that prevents rolling. This, together with the smallness and privacy of the compartments, constitutes the chief speciality of the Mauboussier as distinct from other sleeping cars.
